of collective heating system

When natural gas is supplied for an installation used as a collective heating installation (a shared system that provides heat to multiple properties), this supply is taxed at a fixed energy tax / renewable energy storage tariff. This tariff is the rate from the first bracket of the energy tax / renewable energy storage levy. The total consumption is taxed at this rate.

What is a collective heating system?

A collective heating installation exists when natural gas is supplied to a shared facility that heats multiple immovable properties. A key characteristic is that the individual properties rely on one shared heating installation for their heat demand and generally do not have their own central heating system.

Examples include:
- A shared heating installation in an office building or apartment complex (e.g. an owners' association).

- Multiple independent dwellings such as assisted living units in a residential care facility, retirement home, or student housing.

The legal definitions are set out in Article 47, paragraph 1(h) of the Environmental Taxes Handbook.

The undersigned gas consumer declares

That he/she has truthfully indicated below whether collective heating installation applies, so the supplier can apply the correct tariff:

☐ Yes — the natural gas consumed is used in a collective heating installation. The EAN code(s) can be entered below.

☐ No — the natural gas consumed is not used in a facility that heats multiple immovable properties.

Please tick the applicable option.

This declaration is valid indefinitely, or until the consumer informs the supplier in writing that the situation has changed. If you declare that the natural gas is not used in a collective heating installation, but it later appears that it is, Eneco Zakelijk B.V. or its legal successor will charge the unpaid tax, including any interest, fines, and/or damages incurred. You declare that you will pay this total amount directly to Eneco Zakelijk B.V.
